WORK AND LIVE.—Man was put in the world to work and cannot find true happiness in remitting idle. So long as a man has vitality to spare upon work it must be used or it will become a source of grievous harassing discontent. The man will not know what to do with himself, and when he has reached such a point as that, he is incessantly digging a grave for himself and has lost his own self. Life needs a steady channel to run in—regular habits of sleep and work. It needs a steady stimulating aim—a tendency toward something. An aimless life is unhappy for a long period healthy. Even if a man has achieved wealth sufficient for his needs, he frequently makes so in other respects from business. A greater shock will hardly fall to a man who has been accustomed than that which he experiences when having renounced his pursuits he finds himself in a drowsy hawking upon his idle hands and mind. The current of his life is thus thrown into confusion and settled into a sluggish pool and he begins to rot. When he finds of vanity success, then he can follow no labor without such a dash upon his tones that sleep cannot restore them, then it will be soon enough to start work.
